ASK DR. MOHADJER

WHAT SETS YOUR PRACTICE APART?

People come here to see a specialist. As a member of the American Society of Oculoplastic and Reconstructive Surgeons, I am specifically trained in oculoplastic and eyelid surgery, and that is all I do. In blepharoplasties alone, I do 20 procedures or more per week, and I take each case seriously. Patients trust me to rejuvenate their most expressive feature, and I take great care to ensure the best possible outcome.

WHAT IS A CONSULTATION WITH YOU LIKE?

First, I do a full eye exam and take a close look at the patient's unique features. A patient may complain about excess eyelid skin, but it may be sagging brows that are causing the real problem, which wouldn't be improved by blepharoplasty alone. It is important to look at the anatomy of each patient's entire face to determine the best treatment. I review these concerns with each patient in detail. Understanding expectations, assuaging fears and establishing good communication are the keys to the best result.

HOW DO YOU PUT PATIENTS AT EASE?

Our practice is very patient oriented. When entering our front door, while being examined, or having surgery and being discharged, the entire staff is trained to anticipate your needs. We treat you as a very special guest.

The beauty of blepharoplasty

One of her most-requested procedures, blepharoplasty of the upper and lower eyelids can help patients with droopy eyes and excess skin and fat on multiple levels. "When we treat patients, we change how they look and feel," Dr. Mohadjer says. Once the excess skin of the eyelids is removed, patients not only look years younger but they feel a sense of overall rejuvenation. "So many patients tell me that they feel like a weight has been lifted. They no longer have a shadow in their field of vision, and they no longer experience difficulty keeping their eyes open for long periods of time," Dr. Mohadjer says. "Women become excited because they can wear eyeliner again, something they couldn't do without it smearing all over their eyelid due to skin laxity. It's amazing what it can do for a patient."

EYE ENERGIZER

Seeking to counteract the affects of time and gravity, which presented in her heavy-looking eyes, this 69-year-old patient wanted to appear more awake. After undergoing an upper and lower blepharoplasty, her eyes are more open and her look better matches how young she feels on the inside.

A NEW OUTLOOK

Suffering from reduced peripheral vision and unhappy with the tired appearance of her eyes, this 64-year-old patient underwent ptosis repair with upper blepharoplasty as well as lower eyelid and mid-face fillers to replace volume loss, Botox to address fine lines, and Latisse to boost lash growth.

“to uphold the highest standards and safety, I never take shortcuts”

ABOUT DR. MOHADJER

WHAT IS YOUR FAVORITE PART OF YOUR JOB?

I like it when patients are happier than they dreamed possible. It warms my heart when these small surgeries make such a big difference. Patients who were embarrassed about their looks suddenly look people in the eye with confidence.

HOW WOULD PATIENTS DESCRIBE YOU?

Approachable. The proof is in the many hugs patients give me after seeing their results.

ANY BEAUTY TIPS TO KEEP THE EYES LOOKING YOUNG?

Sunblock. In Florida this is essential to keep the skin around the eyes from getting sun damage. Botox is also a great way to minimize wrinkles before they get really deep. Prevention is key!

WHAT IS THE BEST ADVICE YOU'VE RECEIVED?

Don't be afraid to tell a patient he or she isn't the right candidate for surgery. It lets me sleep at night knowing that I always act in the patient's best interest. It's OK to say no.
